Project Syndicate was established in the early 1990s as an initiative to assist newly independent media in post-communist Central and Eastern Europe. Expansion to Western Europe, Africa, Asia, and the Americas quickly followed, as publishers worldwide sought access to the views of leading thinkers and policymakers on the day’s most important global issues.

Our rapid growth has been guided by rigorous editorial independence and a simple credo: all people – wherever they live, whatever their income, and whatever language they use – deserve equal access to the highest-quality analysis, from a broad range of perspectives, of the events, trends, and forces shaping their lives.

Project Syndicate thus provides an invaluable global public good: ensuring that news media in all countries, regardless of their financial and journalistic resources – and often in challenging political environments – can offer readers original, engaging, and thought-provoking commentaries by the world’s leading innovators in economics and finance, politics, health, technology, and culture.

Indeed, without Project Syndicate, most of the publications we serve would be unable to secure comparable content. Project Syndicate’s unparalleled range and caliber of opinion, our ability to provide analysis of breaking news, and our commitment to focusing minds on complex topics driving the news – development, Asia, Africa, and sustainability, among many others – now benefits some 300 million readers of more than 500 media outlets in over 150 countries.
Project Syndicate constitutes the only truly global forum for informed, high-level debate of the world’s most urgent policy challenges. Indeed, Project Syndicate’s media partners include the world’s most influential agenda setters in both the developed and emerging worlds.

Our Reach

Project Syndicate's contributors are prominent politicians, policymakers, scholars, business leaders, and civic activists from six continents. They include Nobel laureates, heads of state, grassroots campaigners, and academic specialists in fields ranging from economics and politics to the natural sciences and cultural studies—all of whom bring to bear the credibility, diversity, and high-quality analysis that readers demand.

Our ability to reach readers worldwide is unparalleled. In 2018, Project Syndicate commentaries were published nearly 22,000 times around the world. Only Project Syndicate can consistently tap the most insightful contributors—from Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Americas—to provide trenchant, authoritative analysis of the issues commanding global attention and promote viable solutions to the world's urgent problems. As a result, we often play an agenda-shaping role for other news organizations.

Project Syndicate’s magazines – topical (sustainability, technology, finance, etc.) and our annual The Year Ahead – bring together world-renowned thinkers and leaders to address global political, economic, scientific, and cultural developments.

A combination of commentaries, exclusive interviews, and riveting photos, our magazines make sense of the leading issues, ideas, and challenges in the world and are available to Project Syndicate publishing partners as a full magazine licensing product or as a special supplement – based on your publishing needs.
